"GOING GOOD"

A Two Reel Century Comedy With

WANDA WILEY

Wanda is a busy little girl as she climbs all over her car, cleaning and polishing it in her rubber suit. The car slips off its props while she is on top of it and glides away, into the heart of the city's busiest traffic.

She is engaged in cleaning the top of the car and is indifferent to her peril. At this time a dashing young lad leaps out of a ten or twenty story building to elude be-whiskered pursuers who want his formula for turning water into gasoline. The inventor lands by her side and he proves to be a boy friend.

In demonstrating his formula, they have a terrific explosion and both land on the side of a cliff, flipped into each other's clothes. The villains continue to pursue them. Wanda takes a motorcycle -without the owner's consent, and rides away to rescue the inventor who happens to have been kidnapped right out of her hands.

Through a haunted house she wanders, meeting adventure at every turn. Finally, to escape the deep dyed villains, she takes to the roof. There she sees her boy friend who offers her his hand and half interest in the invention. She accepts and he pulls her into the chimney with him -leaving her legs sticking up.
